Executive summary

The data source catalogue specifies the sources of tender and contract data in Europe. Its purpose is to enable the TBFY team to identify where to gather data. By auditing the data source catalogue, the TBFY team ensures that the data source information is accurate and that the data sources most useful to the project are prioritised.

In this document, we set out:

- How the initial catalogue was created
- The first reviews and refinements made to the catalogue
- Details of the auditing process
- A look ahead, explaining how the catalogue will be improved in the future
- An explanation of the metadata that will be gathered on the data gathered from the sources listed in the catalogue

1 Introduction

The data source catalogue specifies the sources of tender and contract data in Europe. Its purpose is to enable the TBFY team to identify where to gather data. By auditing the data source catalogue, the TBFY team ensures that the data source information is accurate and that the data sources most useful to the project are prioritised.

The initial data catalogue has now been built and audited, using as its basis data from OpenOpps's database of millions of public sector tenders. It can be viewed here: <https://github.com/TBFY/WP1-Deliverables/blob/master/D1.1%20Data%20Source%20Catalogue.xlsx>

This report explains how the initial catalogue was compiled and how it will be maintained and improved for the duration of the project.

2 Initial catalogue

Building the initial catalogue was led by Open Opps as part of task 1.1 of Work Package 1, with contributions from Open Corporates, Cerved, OESIA, UPM and MJU.

Open Opps gathered millions of documents from Tenders Electronic Daily (TED), the European Union's online journal of tenders and contracts over certain value thresholds. OpenOpps mapped all of this TED data to the Open Contracting Data Standard, meaning it is now consistent, interoperable with other data and conforms to an internationally recognised standard.

The TED data contains references to the original sources of the tender and contract data, tender portals at country level. Our initial catalogue of resources was a list of the 16,000 sources gathered from TED between January 2017 and February 2018, along with the country and the number of tenders and contracts published by those sources in this time.

The catalogue took the form of a spreadsheet which was uploaded to the TBFY Sharepoint so it can be accessed and edited by all TBFY participants with version control.

3 Audit process

The audit process was completed in three stages, first an initial review to identify which data sources are already included in Open Opps's data, second a review from TBFY business case holders to check the sources and prioritise data gathering activities, and last a manual inspection of a sample of the sources has been performed in order to evaluate the sources against legal, practical, technical and social criteria.

3.1 First review of the catalogue

Open Opps already is gathering data from European sites like TED as well as many large national portals like doffin.no. A full list of these 477 data sources is provided in the Appendix. Open Opps reviewed the catalogue of sources to determine which sources are already being gathered.

Open Opps also requested that the TBFY partners review the list to identify duplicates and to add any data sources that they believed to be important even if they were not on the original list.

3.2 Prioritisation review

There are 16,000 sources from the TED data. In planning further TBFY activities, we need to have a contingency for adding new sources and allocate time to scraper maintenance. Therefore, we need to prioritise the data sources in the catalogue to make sure that we focus on gathering data from sources that will best enable TBFY to meet its objectives. These objectives are best understood by the business case holders.

This audit of data sources was carried out by the TBFY business case holders. The business cases cover data in the following countries:

- Slovenia
- Spain
- Italy
- EU national portals

These business case holders reviewed sources and indicated how important they are using the following rankings:

- Must Have - essential for the delivery of the Business Case. Gathering data from these sources is high priority.
- Nice to Have - data is not essential for the delivery of the Business Case, but gathering this data will be beneficial to improving the quality of the final Business Case. Gathering data from these sources will begin once data has been gathered from the high priority sources.
- Won't Have Now - data is not essential for the delivery of the Business Case and gathering this data won't significantly improve the quality of the Business Case, so we will not gather it as part of TBFY for the moment, although it could be added in future.

When ranking data source, business case holders considered the following decision points:

- How many tenders and contracts were published to the data source in a one year period.
- Whether the data source is the primary data source on tenders and contracts for a country/region.
- Whether the data source is the primary data source for tenders and contracts for a sector or category.
- How essential accessing data from the data source is to fulfilling the needs of the business case.

3.3 Evaluation against legal, practical, technical and social criteria

We have set up an ongoing manual inspection of a sample of the chosen datasets on a Sharepoint spreadsheet also accessible via Github:

<https://github.com/TBFY/WP1-Deliverables/blob/master/D1.1%20Sample%20Audit.xlsx>

We will be evaluating the data sources using the following criteria (discussed below): (i) legal (rights, licensing, privacy); (ii) practical (guarantees, quality) and (iii) social (documentation, support). There are also technical questions about formats and metadata that we are not considering at this point and we will be answering in the process of this project while writing and updating our scrapers.

Our objective is to understand the landscape of quality features of procurement data publishers. While it is often the case that providers publish legal statements about usage and regulations of their procurement data, most of our practical and social questions have, unsurprisingly, a negative answer. In effect, data is very often published unaccompanied by any guarantees, explanations or support. Our initial and future data audit in TBFY aims to raise awareness on procurement data quality issues and effective ways to deal with these issues. We aim to achieve this by engaging with data publishers, publish best practices and similar guidelines on our website and set up forms and questionnaires that will support the addition of quality/provenance information to a dataset. Such a sample google form can be seen on:

<https://docs.google.com/forms/d/e/1FAIpQLSfB7-6vubgbSADvmYijjplTIGqv8abyndCVhDxVJ10eqfNEPQ/viewform>.

Next, we discuss our findings and how these can form the basis of a best practices guideline for publishing quality metadata accompanying procurement data. We need to stress that this is ongoing work, especially since different sources use different languages. Our ongoing spreadsheet has been compiled by using Google automatic translation for translating parts of the websites – this approach is largely insufficient, so our intention is to use work from WP3 in order to automate translation and discovery of quality features as answers to our questions.

Legal evaluation -- Does the publisher state/list:

- Q1) where does the data come from?

For Q1, most of our publishers are the primary or the official publishers of data – so prior provenance is not often applicable. Wherever applicable we plan to include metadata for provenance; we will start by including the original publishers' identifiers and web addresses to each one of the sources identified.

- Q2) that the data can be reused?

Statement of reuse can come in three forms: As a simple positive statement that the data can be reused, as an absence of a prohibition statement on the reuse of the data, or in any legal appendices/licenses to the data.

- Q3) who will have the rights to any data that is produced as part of delivering the service?

Statement of rights and copyrights of data products should be referenced explicitly in the legal license of the data whenever it exists. Some websites (e.g. <https://contractaciopublica.gencat.cat/>) use statements such as "The concept 'reuse of information generated by the public sector' refers to the use made by people, enterprises and organisations to create new products and/or services for other publics or target groups."

- Q4) steps taken to manage personal data

Many publishers have explicitly given detailed personal data management practices and processes. E.g., www.contrataciondelestado.es gives specific points of contact and pointers to relevant bodies in public administration for citizens or entities to exercise their rights over the data. We strongly encourage such practices.

- Q5) Is data release backed by a robust legal framework?

There are standardized data licenses (e.g., <https://opendatacommons.org/licenses/>) that many publishers use, and are encouraged strongly to do so.

Practical evaluation -- Does the publisher state/describe:

- Q6) how frequently the data will be updated, including dumps of data available through an API?

This question, in combination with the provision of provenance information, has a negative answer for most data sources. Some sources even state that they are unable to guarantee that the content of the information is updated. Our work in TBFY will help procurement publishers connect their procurement data with other volatile data and learn to anticipate changes and updates.

- Q7) how any reports of errors will be responded to or handled?

Few publishers have stated good intentions, e.g., madrid.org states that they try to "avoid errors and, where appropriate, repair or update them as soon as possible", but there are no organised efforts to accommodate corrections in the datasets. We stress the need for such functionalities.

- Q8) the quality control processes associated with the data?

We identify a need for data sources to report quality control processes, which none of our examined websites so far has exhibited. There is a part of quality control happening in-house for every data provider, API publisher or website. We believe that documenting these processes and bringing them to light will prove hugely beneficial for the procurement processes, and procurement data post-processing.

- Q9) guarantees of service availability for any APIs?

No provider out of those we looked so far provides guarantees of service availability. We believe that data providers which are the official state bodies tasked with publishing procurement data should provide some kind of service and maintenance guarantee of the data publishing APIs, in order for the public and companies to rely and build value around agents and clients that consume such data.

Social evaluation -- Does the publisher state/describe

- Q10) that there will be documentation to help people understand the data?

Our question is not just about documenting with the different data fields are, which most providers do, but about documentation to help people understand the data. We believe such documentation coupled with visualizations, work that we are doing in WP4, is highly valuable and brings the data closer to the user making it tangible and intuitively understandable. We need to stress the absence of data usage examples from most data providers which would serve understandability. We hope to inform data providers on this topic based on our results in WP4.

- Q11) the level of support provided for users of the data?
- Q12) any activities they will engage in to encourage the use of data?

For these two questions, we will report on our experiences with activities and hackathons organized in the context of WP7, and turn this experience into a best practices suggestion for the procurement data publishers describing how they can engage data consumers and encourage different usages of data.

4 Metadata

OpenOpps is already collecting data on the performance of scrapers, such as when they run and how many documents they gather. OpenOpps will be upgrading its scraper estate to allow greater classification richer metadata to be made available on our data gathering activity. OpenOpps's new metadata will include new information on the quality of the data sourced and links to the licensing data published by each scraper.

The metadata gathered will include:

- When the data was gathered
- The data source
- Data on the performance of scrapers:
  - When they run
  - How many documents they gather.

Open Opps is upgrading its scraper estate to allow greater classification richer metadata to be made available, including new information on the quality of the data sourced and links to the licensing data published by each scraper.

5 Looking Forward

5.1 Data gathering

Now that we have a prioritised list of data sources, we will continue to develop scrapers for them. We anticipate that there will be more requests for new sources to be added as business cases develop. We are also allowing time to maintain these scrapers.

As well as these new scrapers, we will also be gathering data in an XML feed from Slovenia, mapping that to OCDS, and publishing it in the new API service.

Following the review from UPM, JSI and Cerved we will initially target the following data sources:

- www.contrataciondelestado.es

5.2 Continuous improvement

The catalogue will be updated as the project progresses. TBFY partners will be able to edit the spreadsheet to add new sources depending on requirements that emerge as the business cases develop. This also means that should any countries launch new national portals, we will incorporate them into the catalogue. TBFY participants will also be able to re-prioritise portals if they fall out of use.

Additional data can be gathered on sources and displayed in the catalogue, e.g. data format. This additional data will be defined by the metadata related tasks in this project, for example T1.5 which began in M4 of the project.
